

1.9

Your heritage and mine

Reading a photo

When we look at a photograph asking questions helps us to look more closely. This can then be a prompt to talk about our own experiences.

Image courtesy of Newham Archives and Local Studies Library

Crossing patrol, Barking Road.

About the photo.

How many people are there in the photo?

What age do you think they are?

Who is standing on the left/right?

What is the man's job?

What time of year is it? What season is it? How can we tell?

Is the photo old or new? How can we tell?

What is the name of the business in the background?

Where are the children going?

What is the girl thinking?

About our lives in other countries.

How did you travel to school?

How long did it take?

Did you go with anyone?

How did your parents and grandparents travel to school?

Are there school crossing patrols in your country?

Does it snow?

Do you like having your photo taken?

Choose a photo from the Image Pack and make up your own questions.